After pulse game for android

There are a lot of great games available for Android, but how do you choose gems from dross, amazing touch experiences from failed console ports? With our lists, like this! We cover the best titles on Android now, including the best racers, puzzle, adventure games, arcade titles and more. We've tried these games, and we're starting to see where the costs come from - there might be a free sticker added to some of these in the Google Play Store, but sometimes you'll need to buy the app at (IAP) for real benefit - so we'll make sure you know it before downloading. Check back every month for the new game and click through to the following pages to find out the best of the best divided into genres that represent the best of what people are playing now. Android Game of the Month: Ord.(Photo Credit: Crescent Moon Games) ($1.99/£1.89/AU$3.09) ORD. It has roots in classic text adventures and gamebooks, but strips these sources to the bone. Instead of deep plots or even full sentences, encounter one word and two more represent options. Select the one you get the result, which determines the next step. This may sound gimmicky - and it is to some extent - but there is a nuance and ambiance to be found in a small collection of resourced stories. While playing, we left one of them in a horrible episode and we were desperate to escape. Another sweet, satisfactory conclusion was made after a difficult ordeal. Or maybe we're filling in the gaps you can't help but do when the narrative is too small. Ord. is a wonderful stuff, though - smart, affecting witty and replayable, despite the brevity (intentional). The best racing games for AndroidOur favorite Android from top to bottom, 3D and retro racers. (Photo credit: Playres Digital Limited) Table Race: World Tour ($5.99/£4.79/AU$8.99) Top Racing Table: World Tour is a high-speed racer that you've been manualing small cars around circles made of relatively bulky household items. It's like the offspring of small machines and Mario Kart. The races are very competitive, and you find you fending off crazed opponents through cunning maneuvers and unsportsmanlike weapons, in a mad dash to the finish line. Although there are opportunities to upgrade your car to compete better on tougher tracks, the World Tour is devoid of IAP. Instead, it's your skills that will see you take checkered flags - and end up with enough money to buy new luxury cars. With simple but responsive controls, this Android game is a breath of fresh air on a platform where arcade racing is often as much about the depth of your wallet as your skills on the track. (Photo credit: Feral Interactive) GRID Autosport ($9.99/£9.99/AU$14.99)GRID Autosport is a racer, but also a challenge for Android players complaining that they didn't get premium titles, and that the freemium fare comes packed with ads and IAP. This is a full-on premium aaa-hit ad, a sound transfer to your phone (assuming your phone can run - see Google Game Menu page). Even on PCs and keyboards, GRID Autosport was impressive things to release. After five years or so, no less surprising as a mobile address, where you are burning about 100 circles, and battling them in a large group of cars. This is, note, simulation. It won't be easy for you, or allow you to smash the walls at top speed and continue as if nothing happened, but driving aids will help you control what is undoubtedly the best premium racing experience on Android. (Photo credit: Pixelbite) Repulze ($1.49/£1.59/AU$2.39) Repulze exists in the future behind the racers driving too fast; Instead, they are placed in experimental hovercraft that belt along at insane speed. The tradition of track design has also been eliminated, where flat cycles are replaced by roller-like structures that throw you in a stomach-like manner. Divide the game into three stages. It starts with time experiments that may pass through specific colored gates, and ends up with you taking on artificial intelligence opponents, and sometimes - and non-sport - blow them up with weapons. There is a sci-fi background about synthetic men and companies, but really this one is all about speed. At first, you will find trembling controls over and over again smashing trackside and wondering if someone should take your hovercraft license away. But controlling both tracks and controls, the Repulze becomes a exhilarating experience as you bomb along towards the finish line. Rush Rally 3 ($3.99/£3.99/AU$6.99)Rush Rally 3 brings a console-style rally race to Android. For quick explosions, you can go into one rally mode, with a co-driver knocking in your ear. Or there's a grinding metal of rallycross, pitting you against computer cars apparently fueled by aggression. If you are in it in the long run, immerse yourself in a full career mode. None of these options matter corn if the race didn't reach much. Luckily, it's really good. The game looks part, with very clever images and views, whether belting around a racetrack or burning through a forest. Controls also work well, providing a number of settings to accommodate a range of preferences (tilt: virtual buttons) - and skill levels. All in all, it's enough for the game to get that coveted checkered flag. Horizon Chase (free + $2.99 / £2.79 /AU $4.09 IAP) If you're fed up with racing games with more attention as to whether the runway looks realistic rather than how much fun it should be to zoom along at insane speeds, check out Horizon Chase. This tribute to the old arcade titles is all about the sheer joy of racing, rather than boring realism. Vibrant visuals, and soundtracks are jolly and cheery, and the race finds you constantly battling your way to the front of the aggressive pack. If you fondly remember lotus turbo esprit challenge top gear, don't miss this one. (Note that Horizon Chase gives you five free tracks. to open the rest, there's one £2.29/US$2.99 IAP.) Need for speed: Wanted Expect this type of free roaming racing of console versions of this title will be miffed, but the need for speed: wanted is nevertheless one of the finest games of its kind on Android. Yes, the tracks are linear, with only a curious abbreviation, but the actual race bit is fantastic. You belt along the unnatural streets of a dreary, gray city, trying to win events that will enhance your ego and your reputation alike. Wins your wardrobes inflated, allowing you to buy new vehicles to enter on special occasions. The game looks great on Android and has a high octane sound to get you on the move. But mostly, this one is about controls - a combination of responsiveness and drift effort tilt that makes everything feel closer to OutRun 2 than usually without optimizing mobile racing fare. Riptide GP: Rebels ($2.99/£2.99/AU $3.99)Riptide's first two games you had zoomed along undulating water circuits surrounded by shiny metal towers. Riptide Grand Prix: Rebel offers another slice of futuristic racing, but this time you find immersed in the unnatural belly of the sport. As with previous games, I still lead the dungeons, and the race involves not only going very quickly, but also being a huge review at every opportunity available. If you hit a ramp or wave that flings you in the air, you'd better toss your trip around or do a hand position, in order to get a turbo boost on the landing. Reasonable racers don't get something career mode finds you earn cash, upgrade your trip, and maybe ignore the a little tired story bits. The race, though, is gorgeous - a delightful combination of old arcade excitement and modern mobile touch intelligences. Mini Motor Racing ($2.99/£3.19/AU$4.49) Mini Motor Racing is a frantic top-down racer that finds small vehicles rushing around the throttle circuits that evolve and turn in a clear effort that you have to drive over and over in the walls. Cars deal like remote control cars more than real fares, which means that races are usually tight - and are easily lost if you look away from the screen for just a moment. There are tons of content here - many dozens of races that are set across a wide range of environments. You can zoom through the ruins, and scott around the seaside paths. Artificial intelligence is sometimes a little too aggressive, but with savvy car upgrades, natro increase use when racing, you'll be taking over the sometimes fickle flag. Need for speed: Hot pursuit ($4.99/£4.99/AU $7.99) Need for speed: Hot pursuit exists in a world where police seem to think it's quite ok to use their extremely expensive cars for ram-run criminals to succumb. And when they don't, they strap along the streets, and race each other (presumably) decide who pays for the cakes today. It's a fairly simple racer - you're basically weaving your way through the landscape, smashing into other cars, and stirring up a strange trap - but it's exhilarating, fun that echoes classic racers like Chase H.Q.. One of the happy nitro fuzz, you can play out a career as well as a quest, get stuck in the kind of criminal cop smashing alien that won't be fully covered by your car manufacturer's guarantee. Final Highway 2R ($0.99/79p/AU$0.99) Final Highway 2R is a retro racing game, perfectly inspired by the classic Sega OutRun. You strap along in a red car, tearing up the road where everyone instead of driving suspiciously in the same direction. Every now and then, you hit a fork, allowing you to select your path. All the while, cheesy music chatters from the speakers in your device. For old hands, you'll be in a kind of gaming paradise. Arguably, this game is better than the one that inspired it, feeling more fluid and accurate. If you're used to a more realistic fare, give the final quick 2R back - you may find yourself transformed through its breezy attitude, colorful images, and the need for a truly insane speed. Mobile Motorsport Manager 3 ($3.99/£3.99/AU$6.49) Motorsport Manager Mobile 3 is a racing management game without a boring bit. Instead of sitting in front of you a glorified spreadsheet, the game is a balanced combination of accessibility and depth, allowing you to delve into the classy stout of teams, sponsors, mechanics, and even livery. When you're all set, you get a tense and surprisingly exciting top-down racing watch. (This is surprising because you largely monitor zoom numbering discs around circles.) One-time races give you a feel for things, but real meat starts from the bottom of the pile in career mode, with the ultimate goal of becoming a winner. Everything is simplified, spot, mobile-friendly, and a big leap from the original sports manager to the relatively simplistic Mobile. Mobile.
